General Relativity and the art of time-keeping

D. Kleppner
Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Cambridge, USA

The precision of the new generation of optical atomic clocks is approaching the level where the effects of gravity pose an obstacle to inter comparisons. The issues are not merely technical: The problem of synchronizing clocks under the constraints of General Relativity needs to be faced, and the very meaning of time and time standards needs to be reconsidered.